

"And why have you never married, Mr. Priestley?" asked Miss Oldgirl. "Because," said the curate, sternly, "I do not approve of games of chance."—Life.

With the return of the young people to schools and colleges to the east and west the season of gaiety which has filled the holiday time is about ended. Unless there is something but thought up shortly there will be no need for the annual retirement (?) of the Lenten season. The wiles of the world, the flesh and the devil will have to be getting busy or the penitents will be few and far between.

One of the clever men in the town sent a timely gift to one of the fair young widows whose affections he had been seeking to win for some time. It was a timepiece of exquisite workmanship, and attached to the fob was a card bearing the words, "Wishing to keep a watch on the widow, I send her this."

A quiet announcement has recently been made among friends of the engagement of a prominent young couple official and one of the fairest of the city school days. The affair is not ready for publication and the friends who have heard the news are numerous.

There was a quiet little supper one night during the week, two of the principals in which were regretting that they had left the better halves of their families in a village to the north. The regret did not however extend to their appetites and the feast was a satisfactory one. Covers were laid for four.
